Assistant Commissioner for Communications
General Services Administration

Dear Mr. Conrad:

In response to your letter of 7 July 1966 to the Director of Central Intelligence, a careful review has been made of this Agency's possible interest in certain types of communications service. The following comments are keyed to the proposed types of service which the Federal Telecommunications System might provide:

a. A cryptographically secure common user voice service does appear desirable to complement the existing Washington area secure voice network. We would anticipate requirements to selected individual subscribers within the Atomic Energy Commission, Bureau of the Budget, Department of the Treasury, and the Department of Justice. With such a facility it might be appropriate for this Agency to connect trunk lines between our switch and a General Services Administration switch.

b. This Agency has no interest in unsecured video transmissions. At the present time, CIA is a member of a secured facsimile network to the intelligence community in the Washington area.

c. The nature of this Agency's activities is such that a privacy telephone system, as opposed to a secure system, is of limited value.

CIA has been working very closely with the National Communications System in the development of the Interim Washington Area Secure Voice Communications System and we assume any GSA proposal to provide a common user service to minor

IN REPLY REFER TO:

July 7, 1966

Honorable Richard M. Helms
Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D. C. 20505

Dear Mr. Helms:

The Federal Telecommunications System, as maintained by the General Services Administration, seeks to satisfy the communication needs of all the participating agencies. In order to perform this function properly, it is essential that we analyze the latest techniques and equipment which might produce increased economy and efficiency in Government operations. Accordingly, we have been requested to identify requirements for certain specialized communications systems that may prove to be advantageous, provided sufficient need is exhibited by the participating agencies. Among these are the following:

1. A cryptographically secure common user voice service with conferencing capability;
2. Video transmissions of subject matter (diagrams, specifications, charts, etc.) being discussed over the long distance telephone; and,
3. A service which will permit telephone discussions of private matters without fear of disclosure to unauthorized persons.

In order to continue further with our investigations, we must know which agencies have an interest in these services. Therefore, we are requesting a letter giving us an indication of your agency's interest in these services.

Recognizing that there are many factors which preclude commitments from agencies at this time, the information furnished in response to this request should be considered for further discussion purposes only. If specific requirements are not presently known, it would be helpful if you could indicate potential applications for the service or services desired. When we have accumulated all information from the interested agencies, we will arrange for individual or group discussions relevant to these matters.

It would be appreciated if your reply could be forwarded to the address below by July 30, 1966. Negative replies are also desired to complete survey statistics. Information concerning your secure voice requirements should be marked "For Official Use Only" or classified consistent with the classification requirements of your agency.
